Former MLB All Star instructs baseball team

Terry Steinbach, formerly of the Oakland A’s and Minnesota Twins, came to Dordt to share his experiences in Major League Baseball with the Defender baseball team.

Steinbach was a career .271 hitter and hit 162 home runs in the field. and told stories from this days on with hitters in the batting cages, and Steinbach gave advice to pitchers and catchers, worked with hitters in the batting cages, and told stories from his days on the field.

Steinbach was a career .271 hitter and hit 162 home runs in his 11 years in MLB. He was drafted in 1983 by the Oakland A’s, and played for them in 1986 to 1996. He then spent his last three years, 1997 - 1999, with the Minnesota Twins.

On his debut in 1986, Steinbach became the 60th player to hit a home run in his first major league at-bat. Two years later, he became the only player to hit a home run in his first major league at-bat and his first All Star at-bat.

He was named All Star MVP in ’88, and was chosen to play in that game three times during his career. He joined the A’s in claiming three American League Pennants, and in ’89, a World Se Steinbach says he’s not the kind of player that everybody recognizes, the guy who gets swamped with fans every time he leaves the house. But he’s well known on the town.

It’s a testemony to his faith.”

The effects Bosma’s testimony were evident through the number of supportive responses she got to her posts on her site’s guest book. A few of these posts are published at the end of the book.

“Her mood changed; there were ups and downs, and she writes about them. But she was very much upbeat. She loved life; it’s a testimony to her faith.”

---Mike VandenBosch

VandenBosch chose posts submitted in the last few weeks of Bosma’s life, and many are from Dordt students.

“Her mood changed; there were ups and downs, and she writes about them. But she was very much upbeat. She loved life; it’s a testimony to her faith.”

---Mike VandenBosch

Students who were taught Bosma and others who are interested can purchase the book. It will be sold for $18, but the bookstore is holding a 25 percent off sale through Spring Break.

---

Bosma still reaching, inspiring her students

The book, called Wow! What a Ride! A Journey with Cancer, is published by Dordt College Press.

The 280 pages feature a collection of posts from Bosma’s CaringBridge website detail her struggle with cancer from her diagnosis in January 2007 until her death in March 2009. Most are written by Bosma herself, with a few sections from her daughters.

“It’s a very moving story,” Dordt College Press Managing Editor John Kok said. “It’s good to see it in print.”

The book was organized and edited by Bosma’s uncle and former Dordt English professor, Mike VandenBosch.

“I heard from her family that they wanted to save the Car

ingBridge site,” VandenBosch said. “I thought it was a worthwhile project.”

VandenBosch spent his summer in the library, reading, editing, and re-reading the posts before submitting them to Dordt College Press to be published.

“One of the goals was to get a chronological picture of what it’s like with breast cancer,” VandenBosch said. “It’s a battle from the first moments.”

The book is also a way for her family to remember all the good times they had, even while the battle was being fought, VandenBosch said. Yet it can touch those outside the family.

“Anyone who has had cancer or come into close contact with it will find this valuable,” he said.

Bosma’s outlook on life throughout her disease is an inspiration to readers.

“She was a unique character,” VandenBosch said. “Her mood changed; there were ups and downs, and she writes about them. But she was very much upbeat. She loved life; it’s a testimony to her faith.”

The effects Bosma’s testimony were evident through the number of supportive responses she got to her posts on her site’s guest book. A few of these posts are published at the end of the book.

“I would have been nice to publish the whole guestbook,” VandenBosch said. “But it would have been 273 pages, nearly doubling the book in size.”

VandenBosch chose posts submitted in the last few weeks of Bosma’s life, and many are from Dordt students.

---

Bosma still reaching, inspiring her students

The book, called Wow! What a Ride! A Journey with Cancer, is published by Dordt College Press.

The 280 pages feature a collection of posts from Bosma’s CaringBridge website detail her struggle with cancer from her diagnosis in January 2007 until her death in March 2009. Most are written by Bosma herself, with a few sections from her daughters.

“It’s a very moving story,” Dordt College Press Managing Editor John Kok said. “It’s good to see it in print.”

The book was organized and edited by Bosma’s uncle and former Dordt English professor, Mike VandenBosch.

“I heard from her family that they wanted to save the Car

ingBridge site,” VandenBosch said. “I thought it was a worthwhile project.”

VandenBosch spent his summer in the library, reading, editing, and re-reading the posts before submitting them to Dordt College Press to be published.

“One of the goals was to get a chronological picture of what it’s like with breast cancer,” VandenBosch said. “It’s a battle from the first moments.”

The book is also a way for her family to remember all the good times they had, even while the battle was being fought, VandenBosch said. Yet it can touch those outside the family.

“Anyone who has had cancer or come into close contact with it will find this valuable,” he said.

Bosma’s outlook on life throughout her disease is an inspiration to readers.

“She was a unique character,” VandenBosch said. “Her mood changed; there were ups and downs, and she writes about them. But she was very much upbeat. She loved life; it’s a testimony to her faith.”

The effects Bosma’s testimony were evident through the number of supportive responses she got to her posts on her site’s guest book. A few of these posts are published at the end of the book.

“I would have been nice to publish the whole guestbook,” VandenBosch said. “But it would have been 273 pages, nearly doubling the book in size.”

VandenBosch chose posts submitted in the last few weeks of Bosma’s life, and many are from Dordt students.

---
Sewell to travel, teach

As a lecturer, Sewell will be invited to address ARIHE institutions over the next two years. “I wondered how much more work I had to do,” he said, “although I’m not afraid of that. I am actually looking forward to it.”

Sewell will be presenting material developed for a book he is working on, called “Evangelical or Reformational.” He will also present information from lectures he delivered last summer in Europe, a trip supported by Dordt’s Andreas Center. “[The focus of the lectures will be on] how Abraham Kuyper’s perspectives on Christianity relates to the evangelical Christianity,” said Sewell. “And they will explore the history of two different understandings of Christianity and how they related to each other.”

Sewell started writing “Evangelical or Reformational” when he realized that history had to be explored before misunderstandings between Reformed and Evangelical Christians could be addressed. “It would contain a series of stories from history of Christianity,” he added.

Sewell has not yet received definite travelling plans for his lecture series.

Maple leaf missing

Canadian flag missing for the third time this year

“[The focus of the lectures will be on] how Abraham Kuyper’s perspectives on Christianity relates to the evangelical Christianity,” said Sewell. “And they will explore the history of two different understandings of Christianity and how they related to each other.”

Sewell started writing “Evangelical or Reformational” when he realized that history had to be explored before misunderstandings between Reformed and Evangelical Christians could be addressed. “It would contain a series of stories from history of Christianity,” he added.

Sewell has not yet received definite travelling plans for his lecture series.

SYMPOSIUM UPDATE

Michael Ten Haken, marketing and public relations coordinator, presented Symposium with an idea to change the current Dordt College catalog to an online-only format. Fewer students are using the printed catalogs offered at registration, and the cost is outweighing the demand. Moving to an online version would save time and money, and make the catalogue more accessible.

The new format would be different than the PDF files currently available. This idea is in the elementary stages of discussion, and student input is desired.

Symposium presented Ten Haken students’ ideas on the subject:

- The online catalogue should have more functional search capabilities.
- Active catalogueues from at least four years must be available.
- Catalogues could be printed on demand, available in hard copy through advisors or purchased at the bookstore.
- Catalogue could be combined with the registration options on DENIS.

A discussion about the U.S. health system and the current bill is scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 23 from 7 - 9 p.m. in S101.

Presentations will be followed by a discussion panel that will address questions from the audience. The panel is made up of Jacob Bossman, Senator Chuck Grassley’s spokesman; Dr. Nick DeVries, M.D. from Orange City; Barbara Stolle, a nursing professor from St. Luke’s College, and Dordt’s very own Roger Henderson, philosophy professor.

Some questions that will be addressed are: What key changes does the Healthcare bill focus on to make the current system different, or to correct specific problems of the current system? Does Senator Grassley agree with President Obama that the American healthcare system is in crisis? If so, what alternatives does he suggest?

Compiled by: Ashley Stallenga, Editor

Buy, sell, rent at cheapbooks.com. 260-399-6111
Español 212-380-1763, urdu/hindi/punjabi 713-429-4981 see site for other support lines.

Transformation Awaits you!

vibrant community engaging faculty real ministry

Compiled by: Ashlee Stallinga, Editor
Humble Bean hosts Open Mic night

Adam McDonald
Staff Writer

The smell of Chai tea mixed with the nervous tension in the air strongly suggested to the stage one by one to perform at Dordt College’s Open Mic night in the Humble Bean on Jan. 2.

“It’s always nerve racking to do open Mic night,” Humble Bean Manager Matt Kannari said.

Despite the nerves, the overall atmosphere of Open Mic night is relaxed.

“We do Open Mic night to give people a chance to share their talents and just come hang out and see what others can do,” Kannari said.

Andrew Abels took that chance, singing and playing guitar for two songs he wrote: “Please” and “Welcome Home.”

“They (songs) went pretty well. There weren’t many people there, but other than that it was pretty fun,” said sophomore Andrew Abels.

The attendance for the Open Mic night was about 25 people in total.

It really like doing the ‘Welcome Home’ song. It was the first time I performed that for anybody other than my girlfriend,” said Abels. “It’s a good way to express myself and to loosen up with all the homework and stuff. It’s how I relax.”

Victoria Johnston was a last minute entry who sang “Courage Is” by Strange Familiar.

“It was interesting. I would do it again. It was one of the only songs I have memorized and it’s one of my favorites,” said Johnston.

“A lot of students who participate in Open Mic don’t have any other opportunities do that. It’s pretty laid back so there is no pressure for it,” said Kannari.

The next event for the Humble Bean will be a Winter Olympics Opening Ceremonies Party next Friday, Feb. 12, starting at 8 p.m.

Retirement rates return to normal, housing arrangements play a role

Hannah Hart
Staff Writer

As far as retention goes, Registrar Jim Bos says that this year has been “boringly normal.” And that’s a good thing.

Last year, the number of freshman who returned for their spring semester—353 out of 405—was significantly lower than average because of the shaky economic situation. However, this year’s percentage is on the rise: 322 out of 365 freshmen have returned for their spring semester.

Bos notes that the institution tracks the enrollment of freshmen and from the data seen, he believes that this year’s freshman class is the most unstable class.

“Retention rates return to normal, giving people a chance to share their experiences with upperclassmen,” Humble Bean Manager Matt Kannari said.

The Psychology Department will bring Mark McMinn to speak in April. McMinn is a board-certified psychologist, former professor and president of the APA’s Psychology of Religion Division. He will share his views on integrating psychology and Christianity, and address relationships and Christian college students during his evening lecture. He will also visit the Psychology 370 class in addition to meeting with local pastors and church leaders.

More details will be available at later dates.

Weather causes a speechless First Monday

Vanessa Theel
Staff Writer

This month’s first Monday has come and gone without a speaking event.

Lauren F. Winner was unable to make her flight when snow in Durham, North Carolina shut down the roads. Instead, she will be rescheduled in the 2010-11 speaker series.

However, the first Monday series will continue again in March, weather permitting. The History department will host Dean Koldenhoven, former mayor of Palos Heights, Illinois.

In his time as mayor, Koldenhoven defended Muslims’ right to worship and had first-hand experience bringing peace between Muslim and Christian citizens, earning him the John F. Kennedy Profile in Courage Award.

In addition to his speech about these experiences, Koldenhoven will also visit the History 212 class to talk about his experiences with Muslims in politics, and he will give a talk about responding to immigrants and cultural diversity that evening.

The Psychology Department will bring Mark McMinn to speak in April. McMinn is a board-certified psychologist, former professor and president of the APA’s Psychology of Religion Division. He will share his views on integrating psychology and Christianity, and address relationships and Christian college students during his evening lecture. He will also visit the Psychology 370 class in addition to meeting with local pastors and church leaders.

More details will be available at later dates.

CDAs connect campus

Dave DeWit
Staff Writer

The Community Development Assistants (CDA) are funding meals and parties to encourage relationships between upperclassmen and underclassmen.

“Mentoring Meals,” (when upperclassmen cook for underclassmen) started last year, but only a few rooms participated.

“There were maybe 12 people who did the mentoring meal program last year,” said Linsay Vladimir, Dordt College’s campus ministries coordinator. “We’re still in the developing stages.”

Nick Sohre, CDA, says that the purpose of these meals is to “connect the two halves of campus.”

“The ultimate goal is to have mentoring relationships between upperclassmen and underclassmen,” Sohre said. “We help the rooms out as much as we can with the cost in order to get underclassmen into their rooms so they can get to know each other.”

The four CDA’s—Sohre, Amanda Stout, Nathan Gorter, and Justin Carruthers—also decided to support any parties thrown by upperclassmen, as long as freshmen and sophomores are welcome.

Senior Amanda Stout said that these parties are a way to let juniors and seniors do what Resident Assistants might have done in the past.

“The four of us [CDAs] can’t really plan social events for all the buildings,” Stout said, “but we know that good stuff is already happening. We just want to let people know that we’re supporting that.”

Stout is indeed already happening. The CDAs sponsored a campus-wide party held in East Campus apartment B5, and upperclassmen have already signed up to host meals in their apartments.

Gorter hopes that these programs will be the start of continuing relationships between classes.

“The goal of these programs is to push upperclassmen in the right direction so their relationships with [underclassmen] will continue after these programs are finished,” Gorter said.

Vladimirov hopes that these programs will grow in popularity in the coming years.

“In the future, we’re hoping to have 70 to 80 percent of our [underclassmen] students involved in some sort of intentional interaction with underclassmen,” she said.

Upperclassmen can sign up to host meals and parties on the door of Carruthers’ room, Southwest 206.

Diamond Staff 09-10

Editors:
Kelly Cooke
Ashlee Stallings
Meghan Aardsma
Derek Buten
Dave De Witt
Hannah Hart
Sam Hart
Adrian Hielema
Adam McDonald
Robert Minto

Writers:
Emily Sadjak
Alvin Shim
Jesse Veldhamp
Joel Vennhuizen
Drunge Veldhamp
Lake Schut
Lynda Veenhuis
Kerry Zatlin

Copy Editors:
Anneke Beekelmaan
Emily Sadjak
Ashlee Stallings
Kerry Zatlin

Ad Manager:
Kelly Cooke

Cartoonist:
Meghan Aardsma

Advisors:
Jim Schaap

Photographers:
Kelly Cooke
Becky Love
Hany Yang

Layout:
Kelly Cooke
Alvy Hoogendoorn
Ashlee Stallings

Diamond Staff 09-10
Parking spot offered as reward for building name

Joel Venhuizen
Staff Writer

How would you like your own parking spot next to the dormitory or apartment building of your choice? This is precisely what Dordt has proposed to award the one student who comes up with the best name for the new apartment building on campus.

Dordt’s Res Life held a meeting last Monday night to discuss the details of the contest they are holding for all Dordt students. Res Life is encouraging students to come up with an appropriate name for the new apartment building between Southview and the B.J. Haam. But that’s not all. The contest applies to all housing buildings on campus. North, East, West, and Covenant halls, as well as East Campus and Southview apartments are all up for possible renaming.

“The buildings on campus lack identity,” said Res Life staff member Bethany Schuttinga. This competition gives Dordt students a chance to go down in school history, leaving their mark on this campus for the years to come. “I think it’s really good for the campus community,” said sophomore Mark Van Weelden. “Dordt is always finding ways to improve the community feel.”

The contest is open to many options, including naming individual wings of each housing building a total of 22 new names! The real desire seemed to be for “neighborhood names,” to identify areas on campus like the space between North, East, and West halls and the space between Covenant and the three apartment buildings. However, Res Life is not fully committed to changing the old names of all the housing buildings. It is merely an option for students to place their suggestions on.

“We’re not opposed to keeping the current names,” said Schuttinga.

The reward for the student who offers the best name or series of names will be rewarded with a one-year reserved parking spot near the housing building of their choice.

After the end of next year, the student will be able to keep their personalized parking sign.

For current seniors or those without a car, a second reward option is available: 100 dollars cash.

The deadline for the contest is February 14, and all suggestions should be emailed to Robert Taylor.

Students are not limited to one entry into the contest, but Taylor suggests that all ideas be included in one email for his convenience.

Grand opening postponed, Fruited Plain still busy

Alyssa Hoogendoorn
Staff Writer

Apron-clad and hair tied in a low ponytail, Laremy De Vries stands by the cash register, bailing receipt tape while his wife and business partner Rebecca makes espresso.

The couple decided to postpone the grand opening of the Fruited Plain Café until they have everything running smoothly, but they’re staying busy. Laremy foxes the cash register and says, “Soup and a cheese plate…we need to make soup and a cheese plate.” He hurries off to the kitchen in the back. Rebecca stays up front, serving the customers.

It’s near lunch time, which is one of their busier times of day, though Rebecca says Saturdays are usually slower.

A middle-aged man comes in asking about reservations to the Backroom Bistro, which is a part of the café that serves as an Italian restaurant on Friday and Saturday nights.

“Forty-two or forty-four,” Rebecca replies. She says forty people can sit comfortably, but Giovanni likes the ambiance a larger crowd brings to the table. For him, it’s like serving one big family.

The restaurant is also already booked for the Saturday night of Valentine’s Day weekend.

“People have been calling since we were open,” Rebecca says. “The cost of dining is between $12 and $16 per person.” But the Backroom Bistro is not the only thing attracting people to the Fruited Plain Café.

The selection of breakfast and lunch foods, along with the variety of wine and espresso, is expected to bring in people of all ages.

“We want it to be a place where everyone feels comfortable,” Rebecca says. “It’s booked for tonight,” Re-

Dordt students will have live performances and there will be free coffee with a donation.

For updates and special events, become a fan of the Fruited Plain Café on Facebook.

Snowfall in Siouxland

Hani Yang
Staff Writer

Snow. It’s a noun: atmospheric water vapor frozen into ice crystals and falling in light white flakes or lying on the ground as a white layer. Example: “There’s snow everywhere!”

It can also be a verb: “It’s snowing again!” Or, it can be an adjective: “What? Another snowy day?”

Sound familiar? Welcome to $1250.

Just when we had become numb to the beauty of the snow, God allowed us more snow to admire.

In fact, the snowfall seems endless. But maybe it’s too early to complain. He will grant us the joy of witnessing different colors of the nature (other than white) when the time comes. Maybe He will even shine the warm cozy sunrays upon us when the time comes.

We just need to be patient and wait in the snow.
If the happy housewife was something to be sixty years ago, the happy hooker is something to be today. The hooker is today’s hero, and culture would like us to believe that acting and looking like one is somehow empowering and liberating.

Take, for example, a study done by the University of Minnesota in which over a thousand sexually active young men and women were surveyed. The research found the “psychological well-being” of young men and women to be the same across the board – whether their relationships were casual or committed didn’t matter.

The study concluded that having casual sex won’t emotionally scar you for life. But the average age of those surveyed was twenty-one. Our brains don’t reach full cognitive maturity until our mid-twenties, meaning we aren’t quick to think about the long-term consequences of our current actions.

Hooking up is an example of instant gratification at its term. The consequences of our current actions are delayed. We may not care about what kind of a relationship we hold today, perhaps, they are an answer to the question of what kind of a relationship we will have two or three years from now.

Who are we? If the happy housewife was something to be sixty years ago, the happy hooker is something to be today. We are all interested in what we want. “This is what I want.” This decision is followed by several other plunges and, like all of our decisions but to a lesser degree perhaps, they are an answer to our daily question of: “What are we to do with ourselves?” Whether we are interested in what kind of a relationship we want to have with a man or woman.

There are a couple of things that we want to have, our emotions are contrary to that, and perhaps, we want to be with a man or woman who is not emotionally able to reciprocate. Or, are we just looking for someone to make us feel good? Do we keep from discriminating ourselves against four years of an academic institution? We may sometimes be tempted to do it, but we are not interested in what kind of a relationship we want to have with a man or woman. We are not interested in what kind of a relationship we want to have with a man or woman. We are interested in what kind of a relationship we want to have with a man or woman who is not emotionally able to reciprocate.

As I understand it, those that do not regularly answer these questions continue their lives unhindered, and unburdened; they convince themselves that they are interested in what kind of a relationship they want to have with a man or woman. They do not develop their self-confidence or recognize their capabilities and, perhaps, most importantly, do not ask questions. (Even worse— they learn to ask questions in which they criticize instead of being critical.)

The people that do ask those questions always, always, always regret that it took them so long to actively respond and start exploring what they want. They question why they waited until halfway through junior year before their functioning selves had arrived. Semesters end at a frenetic rate. And it’s difficult to make that decision without first establishing an entourage for honest support before putting ourselves out on the stage. That support is critical, in both senses of the word. Our friends should inspire us to live like the people we want to be. They should be able to acknowledge and build up our limitations. In return, we should strive to be capable and active, that we might be proud to say—on this small campus of ours—that they are friends with us. And who are we? Who are we?
Basketball teams face tough conference opponents

Doug Veldhuizen
Guest Writer

Dordt’s men rank in the middle of the Great Plains Athletic Conference, and after struggling through the midway portion of the season, the Defenders started to win again.

A big home game against Northwestern on January 30 capped a five-game winning streak.

“The Northwestern game was a fun atmosphere,” said Douma. “We had a good start and played physical.”

Northwestern kept up for most of the game, but a Defender surge with seven minutes left on the clock proved to be the difference in Dordt’s 78-70 win.

Next on the schedule was the Briar Cliff team, which is sitting ahead of both Dordt and Northwestern in GPAC rankings.

A slow first half forced Douma’s troops to fight their way out of a 12-point deficit. They were within a single point at the buzzer, but the final shot didn’t fall, which left Dordt with a 75-76 loss.

With only two weeks left in the regular season, Coach Douma wants his men to continue to prove themselves in the standings.

“We want to peak at the right time,” he said.

The highly regarded women’s Briar Cliff team also came out of a 12-point deficit. They led most of the game.

Unfortunately, Briar Cliff tied the game with a shot at the buzzer and went on to win in overtime.

“We executed our game plan in a home game against Northwestern. The men went on to win, 78-70. Photo by Kelly Cooke well and we had chances to finish them off, but we couldn’t get it done,” Steimmsma said.

The women also sit in the middle of GPAC rankings with a record of 14-12, in a season that has been highlighted by good wins mixed with tough losses.

Over the last week and a half, the women hope to continue to play well together, one game at a time.

Michael Eekhoff goes up for the basket in a home game against the Northwestern. The men went on to win, 78-70. Photo by Kelly Cooke.
Review:
Realistic relationships central to ‘Up in the Air’

Laura Heckman
Guest Writer

Ryan Bingham feels more at home in the air than in any one place he’s ever called home. A leading character in Up in the Air, Bingham (George Clooney) works for a company that sends him all over the country doing the dirty work of bosses who don’t want to do their own firing or “letting go,” as is the rehearsed line. He insists that his job is to help people transition, and he’s supposed to be their shoulder to cry on when they’re “let go.” But Bingham never sticks around long enough to be of much use to his clients—or anyone else.

Then an ambitious college grad named Natalie proposes the idea of internet firing, a more efficient and cost-effective method. Bingham’s entire approach is turned up on its ear when he meets in his travels. He finds a relationship unlike any he’s ever experienced before. It’s a relationship he actually wants to keep returning to. The relationship Bingham has with these two women and where they take him is the real story here. People begin to matter to him in a way they never have before.

Clooney’s embodiment of Bingham was a refreshing contrast to his superstar roles. The honesty and vulnerability of his performance invites a likability that encourages us to bear with his character. vera Farmiga is electric as the bright-eyed ambitious younger Natalie with agonizing ups and downs. She provides wonderful contrast to Clooney’s character and both are perfect vehicles for fighting the other to see things differently. Her staccato presence is sharp and fast-paced, keeping Bingham and the audience on their toes, creating colorful intervals throughout the film. This film weaves together these people, among others, to show the importance of connections. Your life is not your own. No man is an island.

Writer/director Jason Reitman has created an understatedly realistic portrayal of relationships between three incredibly genuine characters, making this film easy not only to enjoy but to get lost in. Don’t be surprised if you see yourself in one of these people, or even somewhere between all three.

Other upcoming recitals this semester:

Amanda Stout (piano) and Jander Talen (trombone) Wednesday, April 14 at 7:30 pm
Susan LeMahieu (clarinet) Friday, April 23 at 7:30 pm
John Rutgers (trombone) Thursday, May 6 at 4:00 pm

Senior recitals begin

Jenny Borger Staff Writer

Five students are performing their “senior” recitals this semester as a part of Dordt’s music major curriculum. Nathan Schau was the first of the five performers.

“Technically, since I am a junior this was just a half-recital,” Schau said. He’s not a music major but made the decision to do a junior recital. With the help and encouragement from his voice instructor, Deb Vogel, he started his preparations for the recital last year.

“A senior recital typically includes a lot more songs and takes place in the evening,” Schau said. But last week Friday afternoon, around 70 people gathered in the B.J. Haan to hear Schau’s recital begin.

“Having two competitions in one year…that’s unusual,” Versluis said. “It’s tough competition.” But the department does not enter such contests very often. “We had some very fine designs,” Versluis said. “It gives us a chance to see our work within the context of others, and to find out what a customer is looking for—for what ideas are good and which ones need improvement.”

The new project is not as extensive as the Iowa eHealth logo, Versluis said. “It gives us a chance to see our work within the context of others, and to find out what a customer is looking for—for what ideas are good and which ones need improvement.”

The new project is not as extensive as the Iowa eHealth logo, but it is up against many more entries.

There are over 100 colleges in the NACCAP, and all of their students are welcome to join the competition. On top of that, each entry may submit up to three designs.

Versluis expects that all 14 of his Graphics II students, as well as a group from the Dordt chapter of the AIGA—the American Institute of Graphic Arts—will submit three entries each. The designs are due March 15.
Stories from abroad

Sarah Groneck
Guest Columnist

“How can you even believe that the Bible as it now stands contains an ounce of truth?”

It’s 2 a.m. at Oxford. Four of us are sitting around the wooden dining room table, staring at each other over cups of tea and light conversation. Well, the conversation had been light, until Rob brought up this topic. It was then that Emily had stomped out of the room, and Rob started climbing onto the sofa as Abbi tried to formulate an answer to his question.

“Well, the text was written in a different language—” she begins.

“Exactly!” says Rob, pointing a finger at her teacup. “So how do we know that the Bible as it now stands contains an ounce of truth?”

I feel that this is especially true at Dordt, one of the hubs of CRC-dom. We students are passively fed information by well-meaning professors, but we hardly bother to think about what we are learning. We go to chapel, GIFT, and Praise and Worship. But how often do we pipe up to the SCIO leaders and other avidly preach. So, when I talk about religion, I listen closely. There is no shortage of passive Christians, and I don’t want to add my name to that burgeoning list.

Late-night debates about faith are part of my favourite moments about my Oxford experience. I can handle Rob’s questions about religion if I know that I will emerge from the conversation with a stronger conviction of my faith.

OVER/UNDER

Your ultimate guide on how to think.

Dave De Witt
Columnist

The topic: Time

I wrote this at 2:57 AM.

OVERATED: Why is time overrated? Hope you have time to read these.

• Time bombs are proof that time is extremely dangerous.
• Is there anything worse than changing your clock an hour forward for daylight savings? No. There is nothing in the world worse than that.
• FACT! Time is the leading cause of aging.
• Sundials. Do I need to explain? Ok. All they are is dangerously jot out from what would be a nice table. And they don’t even work when it’s cloudy!
• TIME OUT! Time’s a wastin’, and I need to buy some time. I’ll just say “time” a bunch of times to kill some time. I do that from time to time.

UNDERATED: Why is time underrated? Just in the nick of…you get it.

• Time can fly. It’s pretty much a superhero (came up with this in 2.4 seconds).
• It’s a good magazine (.17 seconds for this one).
• FACT! Time is the leading cause of aging. Is there anything in the world worse than that.
• FACT! Time actually does heal all wounds. Just in the nick of…you get it.
• Time is a wastin’, and I need to buy some time. I’ll just say “time” a bunch of times to kill some time. I do that from time to time.

Love is in the air...as usual around here.

This February 14, beware of the top ten worst places to take your date on Valentines’ Day:

1. Siouxpreme.
2. Fruited Plain...it’s closed on Sunday.
3. Butler’s...it’s closed on Sunday.
4. Pizza Ranch...it’s closed on Sunday.
5. Northwestern to steal the Canadian flag back.
6. Your room to watch "Death Race!"
7. Denny's for a free Grand Slam--you’d have to lie to tell them it's your birthday.
8. Music building to make him/her play a love song to you.
9. Dordt’s man-made snow hill to play snoquet.
10. Home to meet the folks.