Poems I Found on My Way to Work: February 9--Ash Wednesday

David Schelhaas
Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol35/iss2/11 January 20—Clear and Bright

The Wolfswinkel’s willow in winter has veiled her face in sheer gold as she stands all alone in the garden, sovereign, mysterious, old.

A stranger, I come to the garden to see Wolfswinkel’s willow aglow and marvel how something in January can blossom surrounded by snow.

All the trees in the neighbors’ backyards, the maples and lindens and larches, stand naked and cold, unable to move, but the willow is dancing. She arches her back toward the sun and inhales the light that the source of light’s sent her, then with alchemy old turns her branches to gold,

the Wolfswinkel’s willow in winter.

February 9—Ash Wednesday

This morning, while Christians all around this blue-green globe received a fingerprint of ash upon their brows, you, with your sense of irony, reached down to touch the dead land where I sometimes struggle to believe and left a fingerprint of frost and a dusting of snow.
Grimy streets, old piles of leaves, corn-stalked fields, even the hands of the naked trees were in the night made white, no, whiter, than snow.