
Pro Rege

Volume 30 Number 2 Arts Issue 2001

Article 23

December 2001

Hate Crime

David Schelhaas
Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Schelhaas, David (2001) "Hate Crime," Pro Rege: Vol. 30: No. 2, 22.

Available at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol30/iss2/23

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the University Publications at Dordt Digital Collections. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Dordt Digital Collections. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.

Hate Crime

David Schelhaas

Already past her I turned when I heard her shout, "I'm sicken tired of waiting for you" and saw her grab him by the hair, an adult pulling her child's hair, he not even five, frail, blond, and, I suppose,
used to her tantrums; still he screamed as I turned away, but I turned again when she shrieked
"Shut up, Shut up, Shut up, Shut up," four times, each one louder than the last, into his little face, little eyes tear-blurred, ears large enough to contain, at least for a time, her hatred—but how long? How long before they go dead, before the heart goes dead, before the face and eyes and ears and heart all die and all that lives is the hatred they've contained? I turn again muttering, "Shame on you, lady, shame, shame, shame."
wondering if love lives in her heart with the hate coming out of her mouth, thinking it probably does, thinking that's no excuse she's as guilty of hate crimes as any idiot who ever spray-painted "nigger" or "hebe" on somebody's house or yard, thinking you can't arrest people for some of the worst crimes, knowing nothing I might say could change anything and only One whose movement into hateful hearts remains mystery could fill hers with love.