
Pro Rege

Volume 43
Number 2 Fine Arts Issue 2014

Article 5

December 2014

Ecology

David Schelhaas
Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

 Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Schelhaas, David (2014) "Ecology," Pro Rege: Vol. 43: No. 2, 10.
Available at: http://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol43/iss2/5

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at Digital Collections @ Dordt. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Digital Collections @ Dordt. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.

A quarterly faculty publication of Dordt College, Sioux Center, Iowa

Ecology

Dave Schelhaas

Yesterday I walked a Gulf coast littered with broken shells, the azure water bright as a color photo in a resort brochure.
Two pairs of dolphins swam just a short way out in a casual search for food. Overhead, floating in wide circles through the clear blue sky, an osprey, white underfeathers bright as he angled toward the sun, was also fishing. But not casually!
When he spotted his prey, he pulled in his wings and dropped like a rock, like a boulder, like Galileo's five pounds of feathers. Utterly reckless, he hit the water with a grand splash and disappeared beneath it, then emerged, writhing fish clasped in his four talons, his outer reversible toes enabling him to carry it securely back to his mate in their high-rise apartment where she waited with their babes, open-mouthed, eager for Papa to come home from the office.

It is an ancient arrangement designed by a Creator whose ways we understand less, the more we know.