Total Immersion

Lorna Van Gilst

Silty water washes down the canyon over the boulders,
over the laughing children,
over me,
plasters hair to faces, clothing to skin.

In the pool below the rocks tiny fish nip boldly at my knees.
More cautious than the fish, the black-cycs chicos leap from rock to rock, splashing their joy in ripples that enclose me.

The children swim to me, pour handfuls of water over my head to cool me from the tropic heat, then draw me gently backward into the pool—
and we come up one.
