

Volume 20 Number 2 Arts Issue

Article 9

December 1991

Grace

Mike Vanden Bosch Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Vanden Bosch, Mike (1991) "Grace," Pro Rege: Vol. 20: No. 2, 9. Available at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol20/iss2/9

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the University Publications at Dordt Digital Collections. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Dordt Digital Collections. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.

Grace

by Mike Vanden Bosch

On a sleeting wintry night a stray mother cat popped five kittens into my windowwell, mothering four with warmth.

The fifth lay a foot apart—lost, cold, and stiff—like a brown three-inch clay rope.

I, like a catherd, picked up the dead to clean my well, but from an unearthly strand of good will took it into my home to light that showed ears and legs slimed flat to the rope—nothing to admire, nothing to love.

I blew on the clay, blew until I was out of breath, then blew again.

I was about to bury it when its neck, then legs, then tail came alive, came a kitten.

A miracle, I thought, and brought the new life back to the well to be suckled with living milk.