December 2015

Very Short Dream

David Schelhaas

Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol44/iss2/8

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at Digital Collections @ Dordt. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Digital Collections @ Dordt. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.
A Very Short Dream

Dave Schelhaas

Then suddenly, Ted, standing at the curb, inspecting
the street which was under repair.
Ted with his eyes squinting,
right hand in his pocket playing with his change,
glasses hanging from a chain around his neck,
tie tucked under his vest.
Ted in all his Tedness.
I had spotted him just as I crossed Main Street in Sioux Center, Iowa, and now, there he was,
standing curbside in Grand Haven, Michigan.
So I pulled over to say “Hi.”

My colleague for many years, never a close friend
but always a presence in the faculty room, Ted had emerged from some wrinkle in my brain
after an absence of thirty years to chat with me a few minutes.
Articulate in every detail-- cigarette cough, wrinkles, buffed finger nails.
He offered me a Strohs,
rang back to his house to get it,
and disappeared.

Awake, I wonder who or what produced my little you-tube interactive video with Ted and filmed it in such precise detail.
And why Ted and not my mother with whom I’ve longed to talk for more than fifty years?
What a piece of work, this brain, this mind, this psyche!

Do evolutionary scientists in their persistent materialism believe they can solve the mystery of my dream?
After they have sliced it into random electrical brain impulses, after they have observed and described,
will they have explained how or why Ted stumbled into my dream or where he came from?
Can they provide an answer that answers?
I am heart-pierced by the mystery of it all,
the exquisite detail, magnificent technique.
What or who,
other than God the brain-maker,
could pull this off?

We see God only rarely and then out of the corner of an eye when amazement shatters what we thought we knew of reality
and rekindles our confidence that he is at the heart of everything.

Peace seeps like a sedative through the streams of my body.
I yawn, turn my pillow
and lay me down to sleep,
perchance to dream.