

Volume 45 Number 2 Fine Arts Issue 2016

Article 8

December 2016

Maximillian Sunflowers

David Schelhaas Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Schelhaas, David (2016) "Maximillian Sunflowers," Pro Rege: Vol. 45: No. 2, 10.

Available at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol45/iss2/8

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the University Publications at Dordt Digital Collections. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Dordt Digital Collections. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.

Maximillian Sunflowers

Dave Schelhaas

Alive with light, the prairie sings, "Yellow, yellow, yellow," as it lures me with its siren song to drown in yellow sunflowers that sway in gentle wind waves like synchronized swimmers.

Each cluster does a circle dance, each flower smiles her wide-toothed joyful smile, so bright one loses sight of the errant aster here and there, the muted golden goldenrod.

Everywhere, everywhere dancing, a million Maximillian Sunflowers, some of them ten feet tall, bend down to kiss me as I walk by. I love them. We all do. Strangers on the path stop to say their praise but cannot find the words.

Nearby a strutting ring-necked pheasant, Brown, blue, red and mottled rose, his whole palette glistening, croaks his dismay as if to say, "I'm the really pretty one." But we can only see the yellow flowers of the sun.