
Pro Rege

Volume 50
Number 2 Fine Arts Issue

Article 12

December 2021

Therefore I say to you, her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much

Rose Postma
Dordt University, rose.postma@dordt.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Postma, Rose (2021) "Therefore I say to you, her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much," Pro Rege: Vol. 50: No. 2, 12.

Available at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol50/iss2/12

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the University Publications at Digital Collections @ Dordt. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Digital Collections @ Dordt. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.

Therefore I say to you, her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much

Rose Postma

Even though I am the one who lost my temper and spoke with the sharp edge of cracking rive ice because she scribbled on the wall, because she tipped over a glass of milk on purpose because she (does it matter what for?), she anoints my feet with bubble bath. My feet, which I have taken to soaking in the tub while she bathes at night, are covered with the calluses of the uncared-for-mother of summer sandals and dusty floors. As a child, I walked barefoot across the floor of my father's machine shop, across the sea of steel chips spat from the lathe, stained blue by the heat of the cut. I walked like a bike tire perfectly balanced so as not to pierce my tender soles.

Now, my daughter, you rub those hardened feet, sloughing skin in dirty whorls: the way fine sandpaper does to balsa wood.