December 2013

Making It Through

Jeri Schelhaas

Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: http://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol42/iss2/11

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the College Publications at Digital Collections @ Dordt. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Digital Collections @ Dordt. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.
Making It Through

Jeri Schelhaas

I’ll confess.
At 14, I bought a Scofield Bible.
I didn’t know that I should avoid that, that I could be led astray by footnotes, evidently overpowering both Word and Spirit at once.
It was such supple leather, could almost fold in half like Billy Graham’s did in the passion of his preaching.

While we’re at it, I’ve got to tell you I listened to Billy Graham religiously, even while, I learned later, Grand Rapids churches debated whether we shared enough of his theology to support him with workers when he came to their town.
Oh, I would have volunteered, prayed with kids to have the courage to make a claim and let people know. I would have proudly carried my Bible, soft leather, and, sorry, Scofield lurking inside.

And then, let’s keep going here, at 14
I didn’t know Bach from Brahms, sang gospel music with a girl’s trio, and preferred, dare I say it, Longfellow to Elliot because my mom did and I trusted her love of meadow larks, and baby irises, October’s bright blue skies, unlayered sentiments, and, okay, here we go, rhyme.

A lot has changed, but let this be enough to ask:
Before the fire burns most of me away, should that 14 year old be forgotten when the choice is made what of “me” makes it through?
She should not be lost in the complexity of personal development.
To enter into the final explosion of the Kingdom, it will be fine with me to become like that little child not because she knew what she was supposed to know, but because she was, in the best sort of way, simple.