Robert Minto
Staff Writer

“If one of your grandparents has a birthday anytime soon, you might consider getting them this,” said Prof. Jim Schaap in one of his classes. He was referring to Sixty at Sixty, his newest book.

Sixty at Sixty: A Boomer Reflects on the Psalms is a collection of meditations, tied together by the common theme of getting older. But, as Eugene Peterson notes in the forward, “You don’t have to be sixty,” to enjoy them. Throughout his long history of publications, Schaap’s essays are fascinating because of the stories he tells. He teaches almost imperceptibly, expressing deep ideas through simple memories and vivid observations. Schaap wrestles with the human emotions expressed in the Psalms, whether through self-deprecating stories about himself or sharing his reflections on the deep meaning of these ancient texts.

“The poor will always be with us, but that doesn’t give us an excuse to not do what we can.”

-- Barb Mellema

Economy in Crisis?
Expert analyst Bob Stein says ‘no’

Jurgen Boerema
Staff Writer

-Americans have reason to be optimistic about the state of their economy, said Bob Stein, a professional economic analyst, in a speech to a nearly-packed crowd at Sioux Center High School. Stein used a large amount of economic data to stress the point that the foundations of the American economy remain strong and dire predictions of a large-scale catastrophe do not have a reasonable basis.

Stein began by looking at the recent housing crisis and its effect on the overall economy. Stein stated that crisis is not as large as portrayed and does not affect the lives of everybody throughout the U.S. However, he says, it still needs attention. He declared that the housing market as a whole will continue to decline over a period of one to two years. Stein did indicate that there are areas of strength in the market and over a period of two to three years the market will find stability again.

“That awful news you hear about a Great Depression is by and large a coastal phenomenon, and does not affect the lives of everyone”, said Stein.

Sixty at Sixty: Schaap’s New Book

Sixty at Sixty: A Boomer Reflects on the Psalms is a collection of meditations, tied together by the common theme of getting older. But, as Eugene Peterson notes in the forward, “You don’t have to be sixty,” to enjoy them. Throughout his long history of publications, Schaap’s essays are fascinating because of the stories he tells. He teaches almost imperceptibly, expressing deep ideas through simple memories and vivid observations. Schaap wrestles with the human emotions expressed in the Psalms, whether through self-deprecating stories about himself or sharing his reflections on the deep meaning of these ancient texts.

“The poor will always be with us, but that doesn’t give us an excuse to not do what we can.”

-- Barb Mellema

Economy in Crisis?
Expert analyst Bob Stein says ‘no’

Jurgen Boerema
Staff Writer

-Americans have reason to be optimistic about the state of their economy, said Bob Stein, a professional economic analyst, in a speech to a nearly-packed crowd at Sioux Center High School. Stein used a large amount of economic data to stress the point that the foundations of the American economy remain strong and dire predictions of a large-scale catastrophe do not have a reasonable basis.

Stein began by looking at the recent housing crisis and its effect on the overall economy. Stein stated that crisis is not as large as portrayed and does not affect the lives of everybody throughout the U.S. However, he says, it still needs attention. He declared that the housing market as a whole will continue to decline over a period of one to two years. Stein did indicate that there are areas of strength in the market and over a period of two to three years the market will find stability again.

“That awful news you hear about a Great Depression is by and large a coastal phenomenon, and does not affect the lives of everyone”, said Stein.

Sixty at Sixty: Schaap’s New Book

Sixty at Sixty: A Boomer Reflects on the Psalms is a collection of meditations, tied together by the common theme of getting older. But, as Eugene Peterson notes in the forward, “You don’t have to be sixty,” to enjoy them. Throughout his long history of publications, Schaap’s essays are fascinating because of the stories he tells. He teaches almost imperceptibly, expressing deep ideas through simple memories and vivid observations. Schaap wrestles with the human emotions expressed in the Psalms, whether through self-deprecating stories about himself or sharing his reflections on the deep meaning of these ancient texts.

“The poor will always be with us, but that doesn’t give us an excuse to not do what we can.”

-- Barb Mellema

Economy in Crisis?
Expert analyst Bob Stein says ‘no’

Jurgen Boerema
Staff Writer

-Americans have reason to be optimistic about the state of their economy, said Bob Stein, a professional economic analyst, in a speech to a nearly-packed crowd at Sioux Center High School. Stein used a large amount of economic data to stress the point that the foundations of the American economy remain strong and dire predictions of a large-scale catastrophe do not have a reasonable basis.

Stein began by looking at the recent housing crisis and its effect on the overall economy. Stein stated that crisis is not as large as portrayed and does not affect the lives of everybody throughout the U.S. However, he says, it still needs attention. He declared that the housing market as a whole will continue to decline over a period of one to two years. Stein did indicate that there are areas of strength in the market and over a period of two to three years the market will find stability again.

“That awful news you hear about a Great Depression is by and large a coastal phenomenon, and does not affect the lives of everyone”, said Stein.

Sixty at Sixty: Schaap’s New Book

Sixty at Sixty: A Boomer Reflects on the Psalms is a collection of meditations, tied together by the common theme of getting older. But, as Eugene Peterson notes in the forward, “You don’t have to be sixty,” to enjoy them. Throughout his long history of publications, Schaap’s essays are fascinating because of the stories he tells. He teaches almost imperceptibly, expressing deep ideas through simple memories and vivid observations. Schaap wrestles with the human emotions expressed in the Psalms, whether through self-deprecating stories about himself or sharing his reflections on the deep meaning of these ancient texts.

“The poor will always be with us, but that doesn’t give us an excuse to not do what we can.”

-- Barb Mellema
Bridget Smith
Staff Writer

Michael Haley was desperate for a relationship with Christ. But the attitude of his own church, along with many others, was that there was a hotter place in hell for homosexuals, he said in a lecture at Dordt College last Thursday.

The truth, Haley said, is that “it often takes someone within the body of Christ to reach out, and not fear appearances.”

Haley experienced ridicule from his father as a small boy, was sexually abused by a family friend at 11 years old, embraced the homosexual lifestyle at 16 years old, and walked away from homosexuality in his late 20s.

In both a chapel speech and an evening lecture, Haley emphasized the need for churches and individuals to change inappropriate attitudes and misconceptions toward homosexuality.

“I have seen a tendency to go toward one extreme or the other,” said Pastor Rod Gorter, Dean of Chapel.

Historically, the church has either accepted homosexuality (as well as other errors such as common law marriage, adultery, etc.) or “threw stones” and passed judgment, he said.

Gorter said he hopes the lecture will help people realize the need for a Christ-like balance of grace and truth, as well as motivate students to reach out to people with struggles.

Haley said when he read the passage in 1 Corinthians that says, “Neither the sexually immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor men who practice homosexuality, nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God,” he realized the playing field was even.

“We each have our own sin,” he said.

In his struggle with homosexuality, Haley said he realized that “the opposite of homosexuality is not heterosexuality – it’s holiness.”

Haley also wanted people to understand that homosexuality is not simply a sexual issue. Instead, homosexuality is primarily an emotional issue with a sexual outlet. In a breakfast meeting, Haley again emphasized the emotional shortfall many sins attempt to fill.

Daniel Davis, Community Development Assistant in East Campus, said, “I hope this understanding of homosexual sin being a derivative of emotional needs will make us, as a Christian community, more sensitive to our brothers and sisters, whom Christ loves and died for, who are struggling with such temptations and sin.”

Davis said the goal of talking to people who are struggling with homosexuality, as well as other sins, should be a healing relationship.

“We must discern the balance of confrontation and mercy,” Davis said.

Haley emphasized the role of strong Christians in his own life. During a visit home, Haley wanted to escape the constant Christian messages in his home. He went to a gay and lesbian gym to work out and was headed toward an illicit relationship with another man. As they walked toward the car, the man told Haley he was a Christian and was trying to walk away from his own homosexual temptations.

The man from the gym led Haley to counselor Jeff Konrad, who relentlessly endeavored to show Haley love and truth. Konrad challenged Haley to delve into his preconceived notion that he was “born this way.”

Haley investigated studies that supposedly proved homosexuality was established at birth. Though he had often reverted to those studies as his reason for being gay, he said none of them proved homosexuality was biological.

“When someone reads a lie often enough and loud enough,” Haley said, “it becomes someone’s own truth.”

Haley said he had finally looked beyond the surface, “and I came to the end of myself.”

When people come to the end of themselves, he said, they don’t believe they have a place to return. But Konrad had led Haley to hope he could find healing with God. Haley thought that if Konrad could be this faithful to him as a counselor, then his God must be amazingly faithful.

Haley said people should not be comfortable about any particular sin, but comfortable to approach people who are struggling with the sin. But people must be careful, he said, because common state messages such as “love the sinner, hate the sin,” alienate the person.

The initial interaction needed is to show people who are struggling that they are cared for and that reconciliation with God is possible. Christ was willing to risk his reputation for those people, Haley said.

Haley noted that the church spends billions of dollars on work in missions – studying language, culture and methods to integrate. But he said the question is, “How much money are we putting into reaching into the ‘uncharted territory’ – gay and lesbian men and women?”

Sixty at Sixty: Schaap’s New Book

Stein: We’re not in for a recession

Stein also noted problems in the economy in regards to lending, but not in the production of goods and services. Stein looked at business cycles in the early 1990s and noted similar trends in today’s economy. He pointed out that massive growth in the 1990s contributed to a natural trend of downward growth later on. “You only invent the Internet once; we are not going to make the same mistake again with massive over-investment in certain areas of business.”

Stein pointed the Federal Reserve’s current policy on interest rates will forestall the possibility of an upcoming recession. “We don’t believe the U.S. is in recession today, we don’t believe it was in recession earlier this year and we don’t believe it is going into recession later in 2009. The primary reason is that tax rates are still relatively low.”

Based on key economic indicators, Stein said, the U.S. economy is not drifting toward recession. He declared that the Federal Reserve’s policies have contributed in part to the weakened dollar and a pattern of inflation. Stein stated that noticeable changes in the economy are a reflection of decisions made 18 to 24 months before. Therefore, it takes a long time to see results. He indicated that the upcoming year will yield gradual shifts in policy and that this will affect inflation developments.

Stein closed his speech with a look at the opportunities Americans have to benefit from cheap stocks. “You are never going to get the better messages that the future returns are going to be very generous,” said Stein.

He went back to his examination of earlier economic cycles to make this point. “It is the mirror image of where we were in 2000, when everybody was invested in stock. If Y2K couldn’t bring us down, nothing can.”

Stein devoted time after his speech to answering a variety of questions on current and related economic issues. In regards to either candidate in the presidential election making a decision regarding taxes, he declared that neither will make the significant step. “Democrats will be reluctant to give Senator McCain significant support and Senator Obama will not want to repeat the mistakes that President Clinton made in 1993.” He voiced support for the decision to nationalize mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac because it limited future economic fallout. It will also bring them back to their original purpose which they were not following. “They should not have been running an investment portfolio when their primary mission is to secure mortgages”. He noted positive aspects of foreign investment and that the United States is in good standing economically in regards to Europe and China in later questions.

Professor Gary Vander Plaats voiced support for Stein’s speech. “I think his analysis was very good. I think the U.S. economy is quite strong with the exception of the housing sector. I do think we are looking at some inflation in the future. I agreed with what he had to say.”

Stein’s speech was part of special event put on by American State Bank to commemorate the fifteenth anniversary of their Investment Branch. Senior members of the bank introduced Mr. Stein and closed the evening by thanking people for attending and for showing their support throughout the years.

Continued from page 1

Professor Schaap remains a good story-teller whatever his subject.

No matter your age, Sixty at Sixty is a good read. Dordt College may be proud of the newest effort from its most prolific teacher.
Miedema joins the music department

Emily Sajdak
Staff Writer

Brad Miedema, a ’93 Dordt graduate and former music teacher at Sioux Center Christian, is the new band and orchestra director at Dordt College.

He was drawn to the idea of working with students who have a higher level of achievement and commitment and is encouraged by how the students are invested in what they do. Dordt students have a higher sense of responsibility and integrity, and are genuinely “real,” Miedema said. “Having students on campus is what this is all about. Students are the ones who get the college going.”

He has a high level of expectation for the Dordt music program and hopes to continue building the program and maintaining the momentum that Duitman started. Miedema is excited to work with students at the college level and “make music in an excellent way by glorifying the Father...and furthering the kingdom.”

After graduating from Dordt with a B.A. in K-12 Instrumental and Choral Music, Miedema got his M.A. in Music Education with an emphasis in conducting at Western Washington University in Bellingham, WA. While attending graduate school, he played horn in the wind symphony and also had an assistantship.

“Students are the ones who get the college going.”

-- Brad Miedema

Previos Teaching Experience:
- Lynden Christian High School
- Orange City Christian Elementary School

Provost job a “joyful surprise” for new arrival Hoekstra

Adrian Hielema
Staff Writer

Being at the top of Academic Affairs might be a daunting task for most, but Erik Hoekstra, Dordt’s first Provost, looks forward to the challenge.

And the challenges are many. The job of Provost not only requires looking at curriculum changes and developing academic offerings to students, but also working closely with Student Services to provide quality Christian education to everyone at Dordt.

“It’s trying to make the connection between academic life and students’ lives outside of class...[we] try to permeate all of students’ lives with Christianity,” Hoekstra said.

To accomplish this goal, the provost works with the administration, faculty, and students. Hoekstra tries to maintain quality teaching amongst the staff and to help the teachers to enjoy their jobs.

“When somebody really enjoys his job, he does a better job of it,” said Hoekstra. “They say leading a faculty is like herding cats, but I don’t really think so.”

Among the other requirements, Hoekstra must also teach one class of Core 100 to ensure he remains close to the academic process.

“I would love to do more, but...there’s a lot to do,” Hoekstra said. Despite its many benefits, being a provost doesn’t exactly make for great dinner-time discussion.

“When I go home and my kids ask me ‘How was work?’ it’s...‘it’s a lot of meetings,’” Hoekstra said.

‘How was work?’ it’s...‘it’s a lot of meetings,” Hoekstra said.

Having taught business for only three years here at Dordt, this father of four wasn’t exactly expecting the job the college offered him.

“God has continued to surprise me with what I am called to do in life,” said Hoekstra, then adding with a smile, “it’s a joyful surprise.”

Erik Hoekstra began his job as provost last spring, a position that serves as an intermediary between students and the administration. Photo by Alvin Shim

A New Tradition: Alumni Weekend
Sept. 26-27

Friday:
5 - 7 p.m. KDCR Soup Supper - $7 for adults, $4.50 for 10 and under, pre-schoolers free.
7:30 Travelogue: “Sea-to-Sea in a Model T,” by Don Van Polen in the B.J. Haan Auditorium

Saturday:
11 a.m. Alumni Tailgate, sponsored by First National Bank
1:00 Football vs. Nebraska Wesleyen
11 a.m. – 2:30 p.m. Kid’s Carnival at the outdoor tennis courts
4:00 Lacrosse: Dordt Sowers vs. Alumni; football field
7:30 p.m. Deuces Wild! Dueling Pianos, B.J. Haan Auditorium. Tickets are $8 for adults, $6 for alumni, $5 for students.

Questions or concerns can be directed to the Diamond editors at diamond@dordt.edu
The Ride:

4 weeks
Seattle, WA to Denver, CO

3 weeks
Denver, CO to Grand Rapids, MI

2 weeks
Grand Rapids, MI to Jersey City, NJ

Distance
4082.6 miles

Sea to Sea rides across America

Kristina De Graaf
Staff Writer

Every three seconds someone dies of poverty. For Barb Mellema this summer, it was every four pedal strokes.

Mellema, Director of Annual Giving at Dordt, was one of two Dordt staff members that participated in the Sea to Sea Bike Tour this summer. Sheryl Taylor, Director of Library Services, rode the Midwest part of the tour. The tour began in Seattle, WA and ended June 30 and ended August 30. Its goal was to raise awareness about the problem of poverty and motivate people to get involved.

The tour was a combination of Mellema’s passions and experiences. She’s been biking for 18 years, and became especially passionate about the crisis of poverty after leading Dordt AMOR trips to Belize and the Dominican Republic.

“Each cyclist’s goal was to raise $10,000 (or $4000 for just one leg of the route). Together they raised over $2.1 million dollars to aid in poverty-reducing efforts.

Taylor reflected on her last day in her blog.

“The poor will always be with us, but that doesn’t give us an excuse to not do what we can,” Mellema said.
With a nudge and a wink, Fifth Wheel makes full-length film on relationships

Kyla Jameson
Staff Writer

Casting began last weekend for a full-length feature film being produced by three Dordt students, and the filmmaking process will continue through the rest of the school year.

Students Piper Kucera, Jess Brauning and Alvin Shim make up the production team Fifth Wheel Productions.

The team has formulated a plan to produce a film that is different than what most students at any college are producing: a full-length feature.

“I realized that I couldn’t tell the kind of stories I wanted to tell in eight-to-fifteen minutes,” Brauning said. “Only at Dordt do we have this kind of freedom – even at the graduate level, students at top level schools only produce shorts, so I feel pretty privileged.”

“[Jess] said something about how every video student makes short films, but it’s never that video students make full-length films,” Shim said. “I think I said, ‘OK! Let’s make a feature-length film!’ And we got really excited and told Piper and she got really excited and we started doing the paper work and planning out the independent study.”

The opportunity to do an independent study allows the trio to receive credit as well as an experience to put on their resume. The film is also going to be the first film shot in high definition on Dordt’s campus. The scriptwriting for the movie has begun. The story is not just to entertain the audience, but will also be quite profound in the end. “The basic idea is that when families break up, putting the pieces back together can look really different,” Brauning said. “It’s essentially a movie about relationships. I think it’s pretty deep.”

Brauning added, “You see, I’m getting married next year, and so is Piper. Alvin, meanwhile, is an eligible bachelor. So it’s definitely a nudge, nudge, wink, wink deal, if you know what I mean. We’re having a lot of fun with it.”

The team members are already getting themselves into the story, and becoming attached to the characters they have created.

“We cared them, their lives, and their situations,” Kucera said. “When something bad happens to them, we almost feel guilty for putting the characters through something so horrible. When something funny happens, we laugh along with them. It’s a strange dynamic.”

Students are encouraged to email either Jess Brauning, Alvin Shim, Piper Kucera or assistant Bree Brouwer if they are interested in being an extra in the film.

Kempema and Gesink bought Doc’s from Larry and Margie Huygens who owned Doc’s for the past 45 years. “We wanted to do it for ourselves,” Kempema said.

Some touch-up work has been done at Doc’s such as painting and cleaning. But plans have been made by Kempema and Gesink to eventually renovate the whole building.

The wall between the dining area and dance hall will be taken out, and the dance floor and bar area are going to be relocated in the back.

“Doc’s has so much potential,” Kempema said. She said they are trying to get rid of fighting and bad crowds and clean up the place. Kempema commented that they are going to be pretty strict on things, but they want people to have fun and have a good time.

New upcoming events at Doc’s include: Wii Tournaments, Packet Beer Special, Monday Night Football, Thrifty Thursdays, other drink specials, and to top it all off, a shuttle service.

However, one event is missing -- Dordt dances.

Kempema reflected about when she went to Dordt dances. Liability for underage drinking was a concern for Kempema and Gesink. They were torn about putting an end to Dordt dances because they “didn’t want to upset anyone.”

But a trip to the police station and a warning that they would be held liable for underage drinking finalized their decision.

Since dancing and drinking seem to be synonymous to college students—regardless of age—Dordt dances at Doc’s have met their end for now.

Kempema hopes to find a way to better control the underage drinking problem at dances. If a solution is found, Dordt dances could be back at Doc’s. Until then, Dordt dances will be held at The Dugout Lounge in Granville. It’s certainly not Doc’s, but it’ll have to do.
opinion.

Celebrity status in Moqatta

Joel Veldkamp shares his experience with the children in Moqatta and “rejoicing and weeping” with fellow students on his semester in Egypt. Part 2 of 3.

Joel Veldkamp
M.E. Correspondent

Moqatta might be my favorite place so far. It didn’t hurt that, after we ate lunch and I was walking towards one of the shops there, I got swarmed by a bunch of little kids who thought I was the bee’s knees.

It started when one of them shouted, “What’s your name?” in pretty good English. “Joel,” I said, pointing to myself. The fact that I could understand them got them really excited. Their older brother, Mishon, who’s 19, knew some more English, and I told them all about myself. “Where are you from?” one said. “Amreeka?,” I said – Arabic for America. “Oh, America!” said one. “You’re a good man.” Well, all right. “America is Christ-ee-an?” said another. “Yes, Christian?” I asked, mimicking the sign of the cross again. Take that, Barack Obama. Another said, “America is so beautiful. Egypt, no.” “No, la!” I said. “Egypt is so b-e-a-u-t-i-f-u-l! That made her happy. By the end, I knew most of their names, had introduced them to all my friends, taken their picture, and signed a few autographs. “You’re famous now, Joel!” Mishon told me. By that point they were literally trapping us by the bookstore entrance, so I had to say goodbye and push through. They bus so they could wave goodbye at me through the window. I’ve never felt so undeservedly loved.

Tonight, we had our b-s m o o t - s o u n d i n g concert, composed by Beethoven in 1805. The piece was about a heroine and hero who faced trials and persecution, but “true love won out after all,” Jones said with an added shrug. The audience could feel the passion of lovers, the hope and the sorrow and, eventually, the joy as the orchestra made Beethoven proud.

The Orchestra dazzled the crowd and took them through a heart-racing, adrenaline-thrilling, smooth-sounding journey of music and time. Dordt students should fill the B.J. Haan to capacity at the next performance. Maybe then the intermission truffles will be free as well.

By the end, I knew most of their names, had introduced them to all my friends, taken their picture, and signed a few autographs.

Each harmony rang out with excellence, and each note spoke of talent. Each time period when including composer, with a short history of choice ready and smooth-sounding composition, had introduced

The Orchestra

Photo Courtesy of Univ. of Iowa webpage.

Hannah Gallo
Staff Writer

They came dressed in black, their weapons tuned, their leaders fearless and practiced. Eachnote speaks of talent.  Each harmony rang out with excellence, and the University of Iowa Symphony Orchestra conquered blizzards and floods to play in the B.J. Haan Auditorium.

“Tonight,” said Brad Miedema, Music Director at Dordt, the Symphony would be “performing master works by that, afterfulfilling the role of a heroine and hero who faced trials and persecution, but “true love won out after all,” Jones said with an added shrug. The audience could feel the passion of lovers, the hope and the sorrow and, eventually, the joy as the orchestra made Beethoven proud.

The Orchestra

The orchestra faced another natural disaster — flooding in their music building. Because of this situation the Orchestra has been practicing in 17 different buildings, from churches to high schools. Watching the music resonate from the stage, the audience would not have guessed the trials Jones and his crew have faced this past year.

The piece was about a heroine and hero who faced trials and persecution, but “true love won out after all,” Jones said with an added shrug. The audience could feel the passion of lovers, the hope and the sorrow and, eventually, the joy as the orchestra made Beethoven proud.

The Orchestra dazzled the crowd and took them through a heart-racing, adrenaline-thrilling, smooth-sounding journey of music and time. Dordt students should fill the B.J. Haan to capacity at the next performance. Maybe then the intermission truffles will be free as well.

By the end, I knew most of their names, had introduced them to all my friends, taken their picture, and signed a few autographs.

Dinner and a show

Alvin Shim
Staff Writer

Last night, I sat down with a small plate of chickpea salad, a piece of soft, buttered bread and a tall glass of water. It was a small break after a day of projects and a night of homework. It was past midnight and it was dinner. And it was delicious.

So I’m calmly resting and taking in some much-needed calories and hydration in the dim lighting of my apartment, and I’m in too much peace to even reach over to turn on any music. I heard, from outside my door, two voices — a guy and a girl — violently cutting into each other and shout to watch the drama unfold.

Perhaps I’ve lived another natural disaster — flooding in their music building. Because of this situation the Orchestra has been practicing in 17 different buildings, from churches to high schools. Watching the music resonate from the stage, the audience would not have guessed the trials Jones and his crew have faced this past year.

The piece was about a heroine and hero who faced trials and persecution, but “true love won out after all,” Jones said with an added shrug. The audience could feel the passion of lovers, the hope and the sorrow and, eventually, the joy as the orchestra made Beethoven proud.

The Orchestra dazzled the crowd and took them through a heart-racing, adrenaline-thrilling, smooth-sounding journey of music and time. Dordt students should fill the B.J. Haan to capacity at the next performance. Maybe then the intermission truffles will be free as well.

I heard, from outside my door, two voices — a guy and a girl — violently cutting into each other and shout to watch the drama unfold.

Perhaps I’ve lived another natural disaster — flooding in their music building. Because of this situation the Orchestra has been practicing in 17 different buildings, from churches to high schools. Watching the music resonate from the stage, the audience would not have guessed the trials Jones and his crew have faced this past year.

The piece was about a heroine and hero who faced trials and persecution, but “true love won out after all,” Jones said with an added shrug. The audience could feel the passion of lovers, the hope and the sorrow and, eventually, the joy as the orchestra made Beethoven proud.

The Orchestra dazzled the crowd and took them through a heart-racing, adrenaline-thrilling, smooth-sounding journey of music and time. Dordt students should fill the B.J. Haan to capacity at the next performance. Maybe then the intermission truffles will be free as well.
Friday night, the B.J. Haan Auditorium was less quiet than usual. The Pops Concert was being held. This year, the theme was: “A Night at the Oscars”.

“The songs are fun and crazy,” said Katie Van Den Top, junior at Dordt. Each year, the combined band and orchestra perform a themed collection of songs and top off the night by dressing up in costumes.

“It was actually kind of fun dressing up and participating,” said freshman Jessica Wessels. This was director Brad Miedema’s first POPS concert at Dordt.

“I really enjoy working with the full orchestra,” said Miedema. He planned this concert with the help of a committee of students. “Just knowing the energy that’s gone into this - the students really worked hard to make this concert happen. I really appreciate that,” said Miedema.

The concert was well-attended with plenty of audience participation. The host and hostess were siblings Lee & Leah Radde. “[They] did an excellent job getting audience involved and interested,” said sophomore Peter Hamstra.

 “[The hosts] were very professional about their job and did it in a fun, entertaining way,” said Van Den Top.

By Matt Turner and Cynthia Breyer
Dordt volleyball players jump to block a ball hit by Midland Lutheran. Photo by Kelly Cooke

Amanda Henke
Staff Writer

Dordt volleyball fans have been introduced to new freshman uniforms, new sleeveless jerseys and new game scores.

Imitating the decision of both Olympic and Division I college teams, the NAIA switched to 25-point games to keep matches shorter and more intense.

Before this season, match point meant 30, win by two. But fans were on their feet faster this year, and rapid, staccato claps started once “24” flashed up on the scoreboard.

“It forces you to play for every point,” said head coach Tom Van den Bosch, in favor of the new scoring system.

Quickener games have meant quicker wins for Dordt, with last Saturday’s three-game sweep lasting one hour and 15 minutes.

The Dordt volleyball team is 16-2 overall and 2-0 in GPAC play. The Defenders have won nine in a row since a non-conference loss to Concordia (CA) on Sept. 5. Dordt is currently ranked third in conference standings behind #1 Hastings and tied with Doane and Northwestern at 2-0.

Dordt has played almost the entire first half of their schedule on opponents’ courts, putting together a respectable 14-2 record on the road and remaining undefeated at home. The Defenders’ home wins came on Sept. 9 and 20, defeating both Dakota Wesleyan and Midland Lutheran 3-0 in the De Witt Gymnasium.

The team will conclude September’s games with a three-match tournament in Bellevue, Neb., and a GPAC matchup at Morningside on the 30th.

The Defenders will then host two matches over Heartland break before facing Northwestern in Orange City on Oct. 7.

Next game: Sept. 26 vs. Kansas Wesleyan, 3:45 p.m., at Bellevue, Neb.