Alien Species

Lorna Van Gilst

My sandals sift the dust
in Calle Junin
and dodge a three-wheeled lorry
that takes the middle of the road.

I edge along
the narrow ditch
and cut between
the morning talk
of two sun-warming women,
dos mujeres neighboring
across the street
from open doors.
A child stumbles
toward a sleeping dog,
its paws outstretched.
“No, niño, no . . .”
Then suddenly the Spanish stops—
I feel the eyes that trace
my shadow in the dust.

The silence holds—

And then, one word:

Americano

¡Si!

They wait.
Silent now.

I sidle on . . .

a monster
in a sea of dust.
