
Pro Rege

Volume 34
Number 2 Fine Arts Issue 2005

Article 22

December 2005

Poems I Found on My Way to Work: February 28--Gray with a Few Snowflakes in the Air

David Schelhaas
Dordt College

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Schelhaas, David (2005) "Poems I Found on My Way to Work: February 28--Gray with a Few Snowflakes in the Air," Pro Rege: Vol. 34: No. 2, 27.
Available at: https://digitalcollections.dordt.edu/pro_rege/vol34/iss2/22

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the University Publications at Dordt Digital Collections. It has been accepted for inclusion in Pro Rege by an authorized administrator of Dordt Digital Collections. For more information, please contact ingrid.mulder@dordt.edu.

February 16—Clear and Bright

The looping swoops of tar that patch the road
I walk are a golden script with which the just-rising sun has scrawled a cheery note.

The blackbird tree performs its same old wheezy tune, like a circus calliope—but today in three four time.

A soft breeze walked in this morning,
picked up an old Des Moines Register from a curbside recycling bin and scattered good news all along Second Ave.

And half a block away, a woodpecker stutters in Morse Code trying to send out a message.
He bangs out an S-P-R but then, distracted by diving finches scooping up the air, flits off to taste and see what it was he meant to say.

February 28—Gray with a Few Snowflakes in the Air

All night long three poems (e-mailed by students)
have been curled up asleep on a microchip.
So tiny, finer than snowflakes, smaller than embryos,
they wait for me to deliver them,
which with a push of a button,
I do.
They slide through the narrow network cable,
and emerge kicking and screaming
on the white page.

How I love their barbaric yawp!