Justice for All

Lorna Van Gilst

Double-flanked
A row of egg crates between the hands

that work their way through garbage bags
of castoff clothes—

Maternity
Babies
Girls
Boys
Ladies
Men
Shoes
Purses, belts, hats—

the rarely worn
the soiled and stained—handkerchief still rumpled in the pocket the stretched, the faded, the torn the neglected—price tags still attached the out-of-style

another life perhaps—
out there beyond
the collection box?

purples and pinks
glitters and dots
Bugle Boy and Guess

Unstuff the bags that hold our hoarded guilt.
Sort and judge and pack.
Then close the crates
and hurry home
to wash off the irony
of abundance.
